SENATE AND HOUSE PASS THE "BONE DRY" BILL.

The "bone dry" bill, which has been the pet measure of the dry forces in the United States Senate and the House for several weeks, and which passed the Senate last week by a large vote, took its longest stride forward Wednesday, when, after two hours of most uproarious debate in the House, it was approved by a four to one majority. The measure, which would raise an iron-clad barrier against the importation of liquor into prohibition States, is expected to receive the approval of President Wilson within a week, thus adding immediately to the "bone dry" territory about one-third of the United States.

The provision is regarded as the most far-reaching that could be enacted by the Federal government, and as sweeping as would be possible under any method short of national prohibition amendments. It would cut off entirely liquor importations, amounting now to millions of dollars annually, into the large number of States which have forbidden manufacture or sale, but have permitted importation for personal use.

Advocates of prohibition were divided among themselves over the expediency of the step, some friends of the cause declaring so drastic a law would have reactionary effect. In the same way those who have opposed prohibition were not unanimous in the opposition when the vote was taken up. The vote as officially announced, was 321 to 72, but a recheck of the roll changed it to 319 to 72. Party lines were completely broken down, and numerous Representatives from prohibition States were recorded as opposed to the measure. So large a vote has seldom been recorded on any measure ever before the House.

A provision barring liquor advertisements from the mails in States that prohibit such advertising is included in the measure, which came before the House as a rider to the annual postoffice appropriation bill, inserted by the Senate last week on motion of Senator Reed by a vote of 55 to 11.

Some members have taken it as their opinion that legislative measures added to the postal bill would not be effective until July 1, the effective date of the appropriations it carries. Senators and Representatives who are considered authorities said that all the legislative riders, including the Reed prohibition amendment undoubtedly would become operative as soon as the President has signed the measure.

Charles I. Frohman, of Columbus, Ind., spent more than $365 to make a calendar he gave to his sister, Miss Lillie Frohman. Frohman used a $1 bill for every day of the month on his fancy calendar, and at the top he showed the moon changes, making the moon of a $5 gold piece.
